

This architectural section drawing depicts a long, low building with a flat roof. The structure is supported by a series of vertical elements, possibly columns or walls, which are shown in cross-section. The interior space is divided into several bays by these vertical supports. The drawing uses a light blue color for the main structure and a darker blue for the roof and some internal components. The overall style is technical and precise, typical of architectural drawings.

